State Water-Use Reduction mandates started Monday

Statewide water-waste prohibitions

The State Water Resources Control Board has banned certain activities statewide to conserve water. Prohibitions that apply to everyone are:

- Using potable water to irrigate ornamental turf on public street medians
- Using outdoor irrigation during and for 48 hours after measurable precipitation
- Using potable water in decorative water features that do not recirculate the water
- Using hoses with no shutoff nozzles to wash cars
- Runoff when irrigating with potable water
- Using potable water to wash sidewalks and driveways

The period for local water agencies to start achieving state-mandated water-use targets started Monday, June 1, making it critical for homes and businesses across San Diego County to immediately limit irrigation of ornamental landscapes with potable water to no more than two days a week.

On May 5, the State Water Resources Control Board adopted emergency statewide regulations that set water-use reduction targets for local water agencies from June 1 through February 2016. State mandates require Water Authority member agencies to reduce their water use by 12 to 36 percent compared to their 2013 water-use levels. (Note: A chart showing agency-by-agency targets is at www.sdcwa.org/drought-response.) Because of its diversified water supply portfolio, the Water Authority has enough water supplies to meet 99 percent of its projected demand for fiscal year 2016.

To help local water agencies meet state targets and avoid state fines, the Water Authority's Board of Directors has restricted irrigation of ornamental landscapes with potable water to no more than two days a week across the region. The Water Authority's 24 retail member agencies have the flexibility to set their own watering days and times. Many of them have already done so, while others are in the process.

The Water Authority also boosted regional conservation and outreach efforts by $1 million. Expanded efforts include funding for advertising and additional home and business water-use surveys. The Water Authority also is stepping up community partnerships, for example, extending a partnership with the San Diego Chapter of the California Restaurant Association and the Food & Beverage Association of San Diego to distribute thousands of table-top tents, check cards and drink coasters with conservation reminders to bars and restaurants across the region.

Residents who want to learn more about water-smart landscaping can visit the Water Authority's garden exhibit, created in partnership with the San Diego Horticultural Society, at the San Diego County Fair from June 5 to July 5.

"San Diego County residents have done a great job conserving water over the past few decades, but we face unprecedented conditions and we each need to find new ways to reduce our water use," said Maureen Stapleton, general manager of the Water Authority. "The easiest way to achieve greater savings is outdoors.

Officers and citizens awarded

by Shondreya Landrum
Last month, the El Cajon Police Department awarded multiple officers and citizens for their hard work and dedication to the city of El Cajon at the 26th Annual El Cajon Police Department's Awards Ceremony. Marc Bailey from San Diego 6, the CW, hosted the event, who despite his busy schedule, continues to give back to the community by working part-time as a Reserve Officer for the El Cajon Police Department. Bailey was also an honoree at the awards ceremony, receiving the "Reserve Officer of the Year" award.

The camaraderie and merriment gave the event an atmosphere that felt more like a family reunion, and all of the officers, police department staff, community members and their loved ones celebrated with each other all night. State Senator Joel Anderson, who is the Vice Chair of the State Senate's Public Safety Committee, recognized these officers and citizens with Senate certificates of recognition and expressed his appreciation when he said, "These officers and citizen heroes do what they do, not for recognition, but because of their passion to serve. They have earned our deepest respect and are worthy of special recognition, and it is my honor to commend them for their selfless actions."

Attendees also learned about the many different tasks that the El Cajon Police Department carries out, including the heroic actions of the Organized Crime Unit which was recognized at the event for taking down a well-known gang, solving murders, and retrieving multiple illegal substances and weapons. Amazing stories were shared about ordinary citizens who stepped up in a moment of crisis to prevent tragedy, like Kelcy Sutton, a campus supervisor from Chaparral High School, who saved a teenager's life who was trying to commit suicide, and Cadet Melad Tilko, who even though he had not yet completed his training to become a police officer, helped prevent a person from committing murder. More than 40 officers and citizen heroes were awarded at this inspiring ceremony, and the El Cajon Police Department hopes to continue its legacy of honoring the brave actions of their officers and the public year after year.

June 4: One Survived, The Other Didn't. On hand to tell us how and why on June 4 at 7 p.m. in the H. Lee House Cultural Center will be historian Robert P. Case and his riveting lecture, "A Tale of Two Cities," the story of the San Diego and San Francisco expositions in 1915.

In the centennial year of Balboa Park, this visual lecture is a must-attend for in-depth understanding of the dynamics of 1915 and why the San Diego exposition buildings lived on to become a spectacular public park, while San Francisco's exposition was destined for the ash heap of history (save for the remains of one glorious Beaux Arts building near the bay).

Personable and engaging, Robert Case is the long-time president of the Spring Valley Historical Society and Principal Investigator of Case Archaeological Consulting. His historical research has centered on Native American tribes, the history and folklore of East County, and numerous development issues for local, state and federal agencies.

The H. Lee House Cultural Center, 3205 Olive Street, Civic Center Park, is flanked by free parking on-street and in the park. History Alive is suitable for ages 14 and over. Videotaping is made possible by a Community Enhancement Grant from the San Diego Board of Supervisors on the recommendation of Supervisor Dianne Jacob, District 2. Ancillary costs of the series are underwritten in part by the Mary England Endowment for Education.

June 6: Masters of the Moment Regional Juried Show. It is that time of year again! It is time to get ready for the East County Art Association's Masters of the Moment Show! The East County Art Association offers some of the best prize money in the County of San Diego for winning entries! Please share this great opportunity with all of your artistic friends and organizations! You can find our prospectus and all of the information for the show on our website at < eastcountartassociation.org > under the 'Special Shows' tab. Submission day is June 6 and the show will run from June 9 to July 1, at Sophie's Art Gallery-109 Rea Ave, El Cajon, Ca.

June 6: The annual Alpine History Day Celebration will be held on Saturday from 11 a.m. - 2 p.m. at the Historical Society's Museum at 2116 Tavern Road, Alpine.

Many new exhibits and entertainment will highlight this year's event. Songs from "Oklahoma" will be performed by Alpine students. Hear presentations on beekeeping, tin-type photography and Sky Hunters "Birds of Prey". See demonstrations on spinning, weaving, treadle machine sewing and crocheting. For the car lover, see Model T Fords, 1957 T-Bird and the almost restored 109 year old buggy. Learn from "Medicinal Herb Discovery Walk" the uses of these herbs. Exhibits include the antique cameras, quilts, beehives, school items and photographs of Alpine history. Free balloon animals and face painting for the children. All will enjoy the hot dogs and hamburgers from the Kiwanis Cook Shack. Finish the day with an ice cream sundae. For more information, contact Carol Morrison at info@alpinehistory.org or 619-445-2544.

June 6: National Trails Day, 9 a.m. to 12 noon at Wright's Field in Alpine. Hosted by Back Country Land Trust. This is a volunteer event. Parking at: Joan MacQueen Middle School, 2001 Tavern Road. For the 2nd-annual National Trails Day event, volunteers will be working on cleaning and maintaining the trails throughout Wright's Field in Alpine. This year, another important project will be added — to remove unsightly graffiti from rocks on the preserve. Specifically, the hilltop viewpoint near the north end of the preserve, named Jerry's Hill, in honor of one of Alpine's late local artists, who loved to paint Wright's Field. This is a great opportunity to meet other outdoor enthusiasts around Alpine and give back to our local nature preserve through this annual day of service! BCLT will provide all tools and equipment, and we'll have extra gloves and safety gear for volunteers to use. Volunteers should bring: sturdy shoes, work clothes, and sun protection.

June 7: La Mesa Firefighters from Heartland Fire & Rescue will present a Pancake Breakfast Fundraiser. The breakfast will be held at La Mesa Fire Station 11, located at 8034 Allison Avenue. The event will be held between the hours of 8:00 a.m. and 12:00 p.m. and is suitable for all ages. Tickets are $5.00 and the meal will consist of pancakes, eggs, sausage, coffee, and orange juice. Tickets can be purchased at the door the day of the breakfast.

June 13: Gunsmoke Casino Night! The El Cajon Valley Host Lions Club will combine their fund raising efforts again this year with the Winchester Widows who will help them present their 5th annual Casino Night on June 13 at 6 p.m. in the El Cajon Community Center 195 Douglas, El Cajon.

Enjoy Gambling and Carousing in an Old West Saloon complete with "Live Western Music," complimentary food and drink plus The Winchester Widows to help keep you Cow Pokes under control. "Gunsmoke V" as it's known locally, will feature all the different gaming tables you enjoy plus a silent auction and a 50/50 drawing. The final chip winners will have a choice of prizes in a Chinese Raffle including a Go Pro camera, Beach Cruiser Bike, Catalina weekend trip, Cannon Camera and a Microsoft Surface Tablet.

Proceeds will be used by the Lions Club to fund their Student eye glass program that provides free eye tests to needy students in the East County and free glasses if they need them. The Widows support Challenge Ranch, which is a 10 acre ranch in Dehesa Valley that provides opportunities for under-privileged children through horse back riding. Inspiration

A waist is a terrible thing to mind

by Dr. James L. Snyder

Is it just me or has the whole world going crazy about diets and exercise?

This came to me sometime this week when I was having trouble sleeping one night. I was tossing, turning and getting grunts from the Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage.

I decided to watch a little bit of television and hopefully in a half hour or so I would get sleepy enough so I could go back to bed. During my watching, I came across so many “infomercials” that I thought I was dreaming or at least having a nightmare.

The thing I noticed about these “infomercials” is the “info” has no commercial value for me. All they want to talk about is diet, diet, diet. Isn't there something more interesting to talk about?

I was watching one “infomercial” and the brazen claim was simply this; if I go on their diet, they guaranteed me that I will look great in a bikini. Really? Why do I want to look great in a bikini?

No sale for me.

Instead of getting drowsy I was getting a little frustrated and angry.

The thing that really got me was simply this; their argument was that being “post-thin” (to use my terminology) is not normal. According to them, normal is being so skinny people can count how many bones you have.

Have these people been out in public recently? If skinny is normal, there are not too many around. If they are looking for normal, they need to see that skinny is not normal.

Personally, I get a little weary of people judging me from their cookie-cutter perspective. Maybe, just maybe, skinny is not normal! Maybe, just maybe,

I, who lean towards the full figure side of the scale, may be normal. Wouldn't that be a kick in their pants!

Some infomercials tried to sell me some kind of exercise equipment. The only shrinking involved in those infomercials would be with my bank account. They earnestly believe in transferring my wealth into their wealth. Of course, if I do buy one of their exercise equipment, I will not have enough money to buy food for the next three months. That would be a sure way to lose weight.

When it comes to diets, my wife is very committed to a balanced diet. The problem is, her concept of a balanced diet and mine are completely different.

When it comes to diets, my wife is very committed to a balanced diet. The problem is, her concept of a balanced diet and mine are completely different.

For my wife, a balanced diet means a little bit of this and a little bit of that and it had better be green and leafy. If there ever was a vegetable queen in the world, she comes close. She has more vegetables on the table than I could ever identify.

Of course, I am assuming they are vegetables because she calls them vegetables. How am I to know they are actually vegetables? The only thing I guard against is that green tree-like vegetable she calls “broccoli.” She has tried sneaking it in and so far, at least to my knowledge, I have avoided any encounter with anything resembling broccoli.

My idea of a balanced diet is simple, all I can balance on my spoon and get into my mouth without dropping it. That, to me, is a balanced diet. I must say I am quite good with my balanced diet. Believe me, it is very hard to balance vegetables on my spoon and I refuse to practice!

Getting back to these infomercials trying to convince me I need to exercise and get on a diet. I would like to inform them I am on what I call the twelve-step program. I have put a lot of thought and planning in this program. There are six steps to the refrigerator and then six steps back to my recliner. This twelve-step program has worked marvelously for me.

As I was watching these infomercials I was not getting sleepy, but I was getting hungry. So, I put my twelve-step program in place and as I was watching the rest of those infomercials, I was eating some nice creamy ice cream along with some crunchy candy and to ease my conscience, a diet soda.

But as for me, I want to fit in with the normal people of this world. After all, I would like to show to the world by my “plumpness” that my wife is the greatest cook in the world.

One of my favorite Bible verses is in the Old Testament. “And the priest shall burn them upon the altar: it is the food of the offering made by fire for a sweet savour: all the fat is the Lord's” (Leviticus 3:16).

If the Lord can handle my size, I need not listen to anybody else.

Dear Dr. Luauna —

Empowering Women to Their Destiny

Dear Readers,

What is my purpose in life? Why am I here? These are common questions many of us at some point. Some search forever, and become frustrated and feel hopeless without an answer. I remember vividly when I was a young girl, lying in my mom's backyard, looking up into the night sky at the stars as I was watering the lawn wondering, “Why am I born?” My life, even as a youngster, left me questioning, “Is this all there is?” Rejection? Pain? Anger? Heartache? Chaos? Turmoil?

I found answer and the purpose for my life! Let me help you find the purpose for your life. Within the first year of discovering God's purpose, I couldn't help but reach out to other broken people. I knew beyond a shadow of a doubt, what God did for me and my children, He could do for others. Today I share my story and reach out with God's love to a lost and hurting world.

I never dreamed as a single mother, a widow, that I would tell my story and preach the gospel all around the world. By His grace, He opened doors for me to preach in England, Italy, Germany, former Yugoslavia, South Korea, Canada, Mexico, and Malawi, Africa. Over the past 36 years the Lord has placed a strong burden for my homeland, America, I am a true Christian missionary to the United States.

Many women are searching for their purpose and their destiny and many women do not understand what the Bible says about their abilities, talents and leadership roles in the Body of Christ. As a result, they are confused and frustrated because they want to be effective and step into their calling, but need better understanding on how, and what God has said about women.

Do you need help finding answers for your future? Are you wondering what the Bible says about women in ministry and their leadership roles in the body of Christ?

Water use ...

more than two days a week watering, and make sure your irrigation system is running without leaks or overspray. Beyond that, stop watering lawn areas that you don't use. It's okay to let them ‘get a tan.’ Then, find ways to cut back indoors by trimming shower times, turning off the faucet quickly and running only full loads of dishes and laundry. Those might seem like small steps, but every gallon conserved will help the region save water for 2016 and help local water agencies avoid fines by the state.”

As a wholesale water provider, the Water Authority coordinates drought response actions for San Diego County to foster consistency while minimizing harm to the region's $206 billion economy. The regional approach to water conservation during the fourth consecutive year of drought centers on decreasing ornamental landscape irrigation first to lessen the economic disruption caused by cuts to water used by industrial, commercial and farming operations. Local water agencies are responsible for determining the specific measures necessary to meet state mandates. Links to local agency restrictions, state regulations and water-saving tips and other resources are at www.whenindrought.org.

State, regional and local drought actions are a response to extended hot and dry conditions across California. Snow water content in the Sierra Nevada snowpack on April 1 was just 5 percent of its historical average – the lowest since snowpack recordkeeping began in 1950 – which means there will be no significant runoff during the summer and fall when California's water demands typically increase. Hydrologic conditions are better in the Colorado River Basin than they are in the Sierra Nevada. Nonetheless, inflows into Lake Powell this year will only be about 60 percent of average, and the river basin remains mired in a multi-year drought.

Conservation efforts have been complicated by an extended period of abnormally high temperatures. The average daily maximum temperatures at San Diego's Lindbergh Field have been higher than normal for 18 of the past 19 months. (Note: Average daily maximum temperatures in May 2015 were slightly below normal, and May 2015 was the wettest May in more than 90 years at Lindbergh Field.)

Current drought conditions are the most severe since the early 1990s, when the Water Authority was almost entirely dependent on the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California for water and MWD reduced supplies to the San Diego region by 31 percent for 13 months. Since then, the Water Authority and its member agencies have been steadily diversifying the region's supply sources. One element of that strategy involved securing independent, long-term Colorado River water supplies through a historic conservation-and-transfer agreement with the Imperial Irrigation District in 2003.

In addition, the Water Authority and Poseidon Water are developing the largest seawater desalination project in the Western Hemisphere. The $1 billion Carlsbad Desalination Project is expected to produce 50 million gallons per day starting this fall.

The Water Authority also has heavily promoted conservation, helping to drive down per capita potable water use in the region by 31 percent since 1990 – and 24 percent since just 2007. Regional potable water use in 2014 was 12 percent lower than it was in 1990, despite adding 700,000 people to the county. Over that period, more than 300,000 jobs were added to the local economy, and the county's annual gross domestic product grew by 80 percent.

For Health's Sake

When children with autism grow old

In the public consciousness, autism spectrum disorder only affects children. In truth, ASD is a lifelong condition. But how it affects older adults is a gaping unknown in autism research. Now, a new and significant grant from the National Institutes of Health (NIH) will help researchers at San Diego State University understand how the disorder plays out across the lifespan.

"Developmental disorders do not end after childhood," said Ruth Carper, a neuroscientist at SDSU and a co-investigator on the project. "Development is a lifelong process, and there is a real need to know what happens later in life for people with autism."

Young diagnosis

For a variety of reasons, it's a subject sorely in need of study, added SDSU psychologist and principal investigator Ralph-Axel Müller. For one, autism spectrum disorder (ASD) was only recognized as a unique disorder about 70 years ago. Over the years, what we now describe as autism has been referred to as childhood schizophrenia or the catch-all, mental retardation. Only in recent years has medical and public awareness grown to the point where it can be reliably diagnosed.

"It's hard to even find older adults who have been diagnosed with autism," Müller explained. "Diagnostic criteria have changed enormously over the decades."

Another reason is that research and treatment has typically focused on children, Carper added. Part of this has to do with the instinct to protect children, which plays out in research and funding, she said. But it's also because behavioral treatments and interventions seem to work best in young children, making childhood autism a natural research target.

Educational systems also tend to serve as de facto mental health support systems, meaning children who are still in school receive more institutional attention. Once people with autism leave school, their welfare falls to their families and to the California Department of Developmental Services. Many wind up living with family members or in care facilities for the rest of their lives and those who are able to live independently often struggle with employment or social acceptance, but don't qualify for support services.

"Fortunately, there's nothing about autism that shortens the lifespan, as far as we know," Carper said, but this also means that adults with ASD may require care and special assistance for many decades.

It remains completely unknown whether some of them may be at risk for accelerated cognitive or neurological decline later in life. This has been seen, for example, in the case of people with Down syndrome, who almost always develop Alzheimer's disorder as adults, as well as in some people with Fragile-X related disorders.

Calls for help

For years, families and advocates have been calling for more research into older adults with autism so that caregivers can ground their support services in hard data and understand what's happening cognitively and emotionally with their loved ones and patients.

"There's really no literature to guide hypotheses in this area," Müller said.

To that end, Carper and Müller recently were awarded a five-year, $3.5-million NIH grant to recruit older adults with autism and perform a series of cognitive and neuroimaging studies. In collaboration with scientists and health workers at the University of California, San Diego, and Alliant International University in San Diego, they are seeking to recruit 70 adults between the ages of 45 and 65 with autism spectrum disorder and an additional 70 control participants.

Using a variety of functional and anatomic brain imaging techniques, the researchers will explore the brain connections of adults with autism to see how they might differ from younger people with the disorder and from adult peers without ASD. They will also give participants assessments of cognitive, social, and language abilities, and measure their executive functioning, motor functioning and memory. Participants' families and caregivers will respond to questionnaires about their daily living skills.

Though this work is still in its earliest stages, Carper said that people are excited about the research's potential.

"Families are excited that anyone is looking into this," she said. "A lot of them feel like they've been forgotten."

Disorder progression

Even though very little scientific research has been done in adults with autism, there are smatterings of anecdotal reports that suggest certain aspects of the disorder might improve over time. For example, Carper noted, some parents have reported that their children's language abilities continue to improve into older age, as do their social skills. Determining whether these improvements are related to normal aging or the natural course of the disorder could help guide therapeutic and support services and suggest new avenues of research.

"We don't know what's in the future for these folks," Carper said, "but we know they need support. Understanding the brain mechanisms at work in older adults with autism can help us improve their lives and the lives of those who care about them."

Kaiser doctors rolling into neighborhoods

San Diego County residents can benefit from Kaiser Permanente's new mobile health vehicle as it visits various communities across the region, helping to improve the health of our community.

Members can receive a range of primary care services from a Kaiser Permanente physician. And because the mobile health vehicle is connected to our innovative electronic health record system, members will get the same continuity of care they receive in all Kaiser Permanente facilities.

The following services are available in the mobile health vehicle: Routine office visits; Immunizations; Ordering prescriptions; Ordering lab tests; Blood pressure; cholesterol and body mass index screenings and help for managing conditions like diabetes and asthma.

"Our mobile health vehicle is another way we care for our patients and improve the overall health of the San Diego community," says Paul Bernstein MD, medical director for Kaiser Permanente San Diego. "It represents the future of healthcare — care that is more convenient and accessible, where people can manage their health close to where they live or work."

Here are some of its key features: Tractor/trailer design; Two full-size exam rooms; ECG in each exam room; Lab/Med prep area; Physician documentation station; Twin generators (primary and backup for reliable operation).

The Mobile health vehicle will be in the Alpine Community parking lot starting soon two days a week.

To schedule your appointment on the San Diego mobile health vehicle, call 800-290-5000 FREE. To request the mobile health vehicle for a San Diego community or employer event, call 619-641-4300.

Smarter dog

Two neighbors are talking to each other.

First neighbor: Do you know that my dog is so smart, he waits for the newspaper to drop at the doorstep and then delivers it to me?

Second neighbor: Of course, I know that very well.

First neighbor: Really, well then, how?

Second neighbor: My dog came and told me.

'San Andreas' – a thrill-a-minute

by James Colt Harrison

Californians have been waiting for the Big One for more than 100 years. Scientists have been predicting the largest earthquake to hit the glorified beaches of La-La Land in recorded history. Of course, it hasn't happened yet and California residents have become complacent and developed a sense of humor against the "major" event coming their way -- maybe.

Hollywood has jumped on the band wagon several times to make earthquake disaster films. Most notably there was San Francisco, made by MGM in 1936 with top stars Clark Gable, Jeannette MacDonald and Spencer Tracy. The Barbary Coast set was put on dollies that shook and rolled and destroyed the city by the Bay. Similar devices were used on Universal's 1974 epic Earthquake, starring Charlton Heston, Ava Gardner, George Kennedy, Monica Lewis and Walter Matthau. This time Hollywood had fun demolishing the entire Los Angeles area.

Imagine the glee running through Warner Bros. studio when San Andreas was green-lighted for a film. All the technicians and computer nerds would have a field day creating newer, bigger, more spectacular scenes of destruction than ever before. Special effects had grown up over the years and unimaginable things were now possible to be put up on the screen. Special effects are now King in films, and the stories and actors take the back seat.

San Andreas delivers the thrills and spills and earthquake chills seemingly every five seconds. There is no chance to sit back and relax because something is constantly careening out of the screen, a building is falling on us floor by floor, and the ocean is washing over us by gulps.

Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson may be The Hulk's bigger brother and has the hams-as-arms to prove it, but he has a certain charm and charisma about him that endears him to the viewer. At his grumpiest he doesn't exude danger, but only seems like a big pussycat and his cuddly personality comes out on the screen. People love him and that's why he's a star.

Johnson plays Ray, a rescue helicopter pilot who more than earns his salary. He is determined to save his daughter Blake (Alexandra Daddario) and soon-to-be-ex-wife Emma (Carla Gugino) when they are caught in the crumbling wasteland of San Francisco and the quake hits. The two women have a penchant for getting into more scrapes than can be imagined. Young Blake even has time for romance when she meets visiting Brit Ben (Hugo Johnstone-Burt) and his sidekick little brother, smart-aleky Ollie (Art Parkinson). In the meantime they are all drowning while glugging gallons of water.

Paul Giamatti adds to his repertoire of notable characters by playing Lawrence, a Cal Tech seismologist who predicts every tremor and shake that adds up to the big one. He mumbles and sputters in a vaudeville impression of a smart egg-head professor type.

The plot is as thin as a slice of prosciutto, and merely serves as the glue that connects each spectacular disaster scene. It's hard to dissect a plot that is barely there, but literary excellence isn't the reason for this movie. It's pure entertainment, a thrill-a-minute cascade through hellish events, and one terrific and entertaining film.

by Diana Saenger

Base Jumping has always intrigued and fascinated many onlookers. 'Who would want to do that?' many ask. Looking at how fast the sport is growing, it could be lots of adventurers.

Carl Boenish was one of those adventurers back in the 1970s, and his story, as well as his wife Jean's, is now a documentary. Sunshine Superman was written and directed by Marah Strauch who was also a base jumper.

Much of the footage that Carl shot himself during jumps details the believable and unbelievable stories of these early jumpers. Although he was educated as an engineer, Carl followed his heart and became an aerial filmmaker, working on Hollywood movies. His face is nothing but joy and excitement with jumps from cliffs or high buildings, but Carl reveals in the film it's the filming he enjoyed more than jumping.

Jean was a skydiver and met Carl in 1979. They married shortly after and the film clearly shows they were a perfect match. Even the other jumpers they were around recognized their love and that Jean was the brains of the company they started.

Carl's group was among the first to leap off the top of El Cap using parachutes. Rangers immediately stepped in to stop base jumping. One such ranger would later think twice about his decision.

Watching the dangerous jumps from various places is exciting and occasionally breathe-holding. Some of the apparatus they used to get further out on the cliffs appears scary. But these jumpers knew the risk they took and went for it anyway. Such was the situation with the recent loss of base jumpers extreme athlete Dean Potter and his friend Graham Hunt.

San Diego ROTC instructors honor Ashley Feil for serving the military

by Diana Saenger

At the Alpine Wall of Honor on June 1, 2015 10-year old Ashley Feil was acknowledged for her huge heart in reaching out to our men and women serving in our Armed Forces. Ashley attends one of the schools in East San Diego County where Kirsten Yuhl-Torres is head of the Student to Soldier Program.

"SSG Brian De Santiago, SFC David Schible (Cal State San Marcos ROTC) and SFC Angel Martinez (USD ROTC) started working with our Student to Soldier Program in schools this year to support the students," Yuhl-Torres said. "They've done a color guard there, a drill sergeant experience, which was so fun, and distributed cards and letters written by the students to cadets who have written back. They were so taken with Ashley that David Schible offered to create a plaque to honor her work, and it's beautiful. These men are amazing; they are drill sergeants and have all been deployed to the war zone, and teach Military Classes at Schools and arrange color guards when needed for events in San Diego County."

As Ashley arrived with her mother; friends and Alpine Wall of Honor committee members gathered to congratulate her. Yuhl-Torres said she wanted Ashley to meet Dan Foster — who started the Wall of Honor.

"They both have a love and passion to help people, Dan for getting this Wall of Honor with nearly 600 tiles of those who have or are serving our country, and Ashley sending cards, both to say "Thank You" and honor them," Yuhl-Torres said.

Ashley was already making cards to send to Make A Wish children when her cousin was diagnosed with cancer. When Yuhl-Torres came to her school with the Student to Soldier Program, Ashley decided to make soldier cards as well. Ashley adds a drawing and a note to each card and gets help from others to do some of them.

"At first I did 200, then 100 more and have more now," Ashley said. "I like doing this because my great-grandpa was in the Navy for 30 years, and my grandpa was in WWII."

Ashley's mother Serena is proud of her daughter but never imagined it would lead to this.

"I know she's an amazing kid and she has a good heart," Serena said. "I never expected this to go this far, I was just proud of her. But when she gets an idea she goes all in. She started making cards every day at home."

SFC David Schible spoke to those attending. "I told Ashley, billionaires have lots of money with big business and corporations but to a service member when they are deployed, that card or letter is priceless. We put our lives on the line overseas so when we come back from a mission and get a letter or care package it means more to us than anything else, and puts a smile on our face. We teach our junior enlisted to be humble and do the right thing, and that's why we Thank Ashley for her work, and hope she inspires others to do that."

Dan Foster said to Ashley, "You are incredible and it's so refreshing to have someone like you for what you're doing. Thank You and your mother; we are honored to have you here."

The Plaque to Ashley read: Thank You for your undying support to our service members and the Student to Soldier Program. Your hard work and dedication is recognized around the world. From Kirsten and Vern Torres of the Student to Soldier Program and the Men and Women of the United States Armed Forces.

Sheriff's Substation opens in Lakeside

Deputy Pugh and Lakeside Historical Society member Bobbie Pogue

The sheriff's substation is located in the old Lakeside Fire Protection office, 12365 Parkside Street, which underwent a 3.1 million dollar improvement paid for through a capital project. The cash paid project brought 120 construction jobs to the area.

Representatives from Senator Anderson's and Assemblyman Jones' office, along with La Mesa's Police Chief, Santee's Mayor and Santee and

Sheriff Gore told the audience without the help of Supervisor Diane Jacob this wouldn't have happened.

"Safety is at the top of the list, so watch out criminals and God bless those who have chosen this field," said Jacob. "And God Bless America."

Those who toured the substation saw the detective's stations, a holding cell, detention benches and a booking station.

People who are booked will generally spend 2-3 hours before going to the downtown jail. The substation will bring community policing closer to the people.

"This is a great day in Lakeside" County Supervisor Jacob said.

Jean Boenish talks about 'Sunshine Superman'

Jean Boenish

Interview by Diana Saenger

From a young girl who got excited to skydive to a married woman to one of sports' most noted adventurers, Jean Boenish has had uplifting and sad times. Losing her husband Carl Boenish – noted for starting base jumping – her memories and experiences are well explored in the film Sunshine Superman now showing in theatres.

Q. How was it for you to see this film the first time?

JB: It's definitely a sifting movie that doesn't allow viewers to get out of the movie what they need to enhance their life experience whether it's hope, right from wrong, or truth from error. Yet it's very poetic in that regard. I think people are identifying with that and of course the inspiration it brings to their lives is a wonderful thing and that's what communicating and sharing are all about.

Q. Jumpers offer a lot of different reasons why they jump in the film; did you identify with them?

JB: There are a lot of themes in the film and Marah, the director, is very careful not to focus on a particular theme but to let them come to it themselves. It's an intelligent approach because it's hard to fit an entire lifetime of intelligent approaches, caring for people, caring about your every impact with foresight so that you reduce, minimize or get rid of the impacts in an hour and a half film.

Q. I believe you were skydiving before you met Carl, correct?

JB: I met Carl in April 1979 when I saw his movie Skydive. There's a little segment about that in the movie. I started skydiving during the summer in a different state and I came back to finish school at Pomona College. I wondered where the drop center was so I called him to find out. He picked me up and took me there.

Q. You appeared to be perfect for each other. Why were you the right one for Carl?

JB: I think we shared similar philosophies of life. We both had a desire to try new things, as we were young. We were married for four and a half years and together 24 hours a day in work, play, and adventure. We stuffed a lot of lifetime in those years. I think all of us have things in our minds we'd like to try sometime and to know if it ever came up we would be prepared. Like jumping out of an airplane! It's fun to go to through the progression of learning and discovering more about your capabilities. I think when we're young we naturally build our capabilities without restrictions. We run into that more these days and should guard against that because we remove the spirit and opportunities out of our children.

Q. In watching the film I noticed over and over that all of the jumpers around you who were huge fans or friends with Carl and seemed to realize that connection. They admired him and seemed to have the same admiration for you!

JB: We were all buddies of curiosity with a quest to discover. Nothing was forced. It was all natural and gender never came up. We nurtured Carl's capabilities and we grew together. People talk about the bond of going to war but rarely talk about the bond of love. There were times during this film that people who had not seen each other for a long time were touched. They had been involved in something that was so intense and a vital activity that had to do with life and death.

Q. Where in the states did you jump from?

JB: The big place hundreds of jumpers would go to every year -- which would not be the pattern for Yosemite because they had to be treated differently -- was the festival at New River Gorge National River in West Virginia. It started out a casual place to jump and then the National Parks Service had questions about the landing area. We had to help them understand what we were doing and fit into their requirements for permit conditions.

Q. How did you go about that?

JB: I read the requirements for permit conditions so I wrote up 10 of them like labeling it powerless flight and not aerial delivery. They adopted them verbatim. Sometimes we had to deal with 100,000 spectators so management had to learn to meet everybody's needs there.

Q. Was it different jumping in Yosemite?

JB: Yes. It's very difficult there to see someone jump and the final landing is so far away no one can see or hear the canopy open, so it's vastly different. We discovered that in the 1980s they had 12 jumps a day off the same site within half an hour. People would congregate in the meadow down below and the Park Service worried about the grass getting trampled. So it was the limitation of time causing the problems.

Q. When Carl decided to jump from the Troll Wall that is part of the mountain massif Trolltindene on the Norwegian west coast, what did you think?

JB: We were all very aware of the need to do everything properly so it's like the anti-war. I look at this movie as an anti-9/11 because there's so much negative residue, and we tend to lose sight of what's real. I love that this movie is all real; no CGI, no violence, and even people who think they're on the other side like the chief ranger, met my expectations in what he offered for the movie. That was a courageous thing to remove his hat of being in a hierarchy and reflect on what really happened and give his honest opinion that made a huge difference to people's lives.

In 1980 when Carl and I started filming -- which was how we made our living by selling Carl's films -- some Swedish jumpers in the middle of one of the amphitheaters in that area. It had a low point on one side of the troll spire and a high point on the other side. Now there's regular jumping going on in Switzerland, but there wasn't then at the time in Norway. Widowhood is a very hard thing. We weren't worried about dying or accidents because we had a very serious approach about doing everything the right way.

As soon as we got married we had wills made and everything was prepared. Carl had a very full life up to that point finishing so many films and projects. He was one of those men a lot like those two jumpers a few weeks ago. Some people burn their wicks at both ends trying to develop something and offer it for the betterment of society because they have a passion, and that's their legitimate purpose in life. Carl knew how much he had offered and how much he had already done, and he said, "If I die that's fine, and I'm happy with what I've done." He was saying if he died jumping tomorrow or today nobody should miss a beat in his life but go on.

Q. The part in the film where the two Norwegian photographers are waiting for Carl to jump and talking about Jesus and how Carl referred to his parachute as his angel was very potent. What did you think when they figured out what happened and pulled the film out of the camera to expose it?

JB: The Norwegians expressed the tenderness of the truth so beautifully at that moment. It really did affect a lot of people there. When I went to the airport afterwards; the entire country knew I was taking Carl's ashes home. It impacted their lives when Marah took us back 30 years later to do shots in Norway. But it was an opportunity to start the healing they never had. That was most important; the feeling of love so strong. It was like bringing a family back together.

Pulling the film out of the camera was an act of love for Carl. It was a natural respect and decision to do what they felt was the right thing and it should always be that easy to stand up and do the right thing. Interestingly, even though they had exposed the film I ask for it, took it home and developed it and was able to see the beginning of Carl's launch. That's how I knew that there was nothing wrong with the launch. That helped me to investigate to see what went wrong.

Q. What do you hope people take away from seeing Sunshine Superman?

JB: I was happy that Marah wanted to do a memorial for her uncle about base jumping and got in touch with me. I knew she would do the right thing with it. I encouraged other jumpers to support the project and come forward with enthusiasm to make it less difficult. But Marah did all the work and deserves all the credit. The film's wholeness carries itself and conveys the message's so beautifully. It's not about base jumping; that's a small carrier for what's in the film. I feel it has something very important to offer. One critic said this movie was about a real superhero. There still are many films that people haven't seen, and I hope someday people could see the rest of Carl's films.

Some call Carl's last jump heroic, others unwise. But Sunshine Superman reveals anything but just listening to his buddies and his wife. "We were involved in something that was so intense and a vital activity that had to do with life and death, and we were all very aware of the need to do it properly," Jean said.

Many attest that for Carl the laws of nature were more important than the laws of man. Because he felt the freedom and power in jumping he claimed to feel like superman, hence part of the reason for the title.

Anyone who hears the intro line in the Sunshine Superman Movie trailer will not want to miss this film.

"We had agreed it was suicidal and had this feeling of doom. No one could survive that jump and Carl thought he could get away with it, but the mountain had other ideas."

Sunshine Superman won an audience award at the Portland International Film Festival and is playing June 5 & 6 at the Landmark Theatre in La Jolla.

If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. Tips for a well behaved dog - Part 2

Does your dog jump on strangers? If instructed to stop, does he or she listen? Jumping and tackling can be perceived as aggressive behaviors and can give off the appearance that you might not have complete control of your dog. However, unlike barking, bouncing or jumping is even more controllable by training. If the problem exists with your pup, the ASPCA provides the following tips to correct the problem:

In order to successfully train your dog to interact with other people, you need to train him or her one-on-one first. When greeted by your jumping dog, keep calm. The more excited you are, the more excited your dog will be. If it begins to jump, do not reach out to pet or stroke the dog. Instead, keep your eyes raised to avoid eye contact and keep your arms and hands away until the dog keeps its front feet on the ground.

Once the canine has calmed and is standing on four feet, immediately reach out to show affection. This will emphasize the importance of staying down when greeting. If the dog becomes excited and begins jumping again, restart the process.

If initial training tips don't help, or if training takes a while, it's important to keep your dog on a short leash while interacting with other people. Products like comfortable no-jump dog harnesses work well in keeping control over your pup and will help other people feel more comfortable around your dog. In addition, always keep treats on hand to encourage your dog to stay calm and by your side.

Staying

If your dog doesn't have a jumping or barking problem, he might have a problem with running free. Between the front yard, backyard and entire neighborhood, there's just so much to see! But this can be extremely invasive and bothersome to other neighbors. If your dog commonly attempts to break free during a walk or run, or tries to get loose from the yard or house, try the following steps to control the behavior:

According to the ASPCA, the hardest to achieve but most effective training tip to control your dog when it attempts to run or chase is establishing a call that works. To train your dog, simply practice the specific call repeatedly for as long as it takes until the dog begins to adapt. Each time you make the call toward your dog, reward him or her with a treat to set firm expectations that coming when called is a positive thing. Try practicing this training exercise while on a walk. If your dog begins to wander, simply pat your legs and call it for a treat to set expectations that your dog should stick close to you when outside. Keeping a training tool with you can also be handy in case your dog decides to ignore a command or call. Using a tool like the First Alert™ Bark Genie Handheld Ultrasonic Bark Deterrent utilizes the same pet-friendly technology and allows for more precise training control over your dog.

If your dog is attempting to break free from an enclosed area such as a backyard, ensure that your fence is an appropriate height, that there are no gaps in the fence and that your dog isn't prone to digging to escape. Practice the same training tips to calmly control your dog and remember — it might take some time!

If nothing else works, and if time allows, tire out your pup with extensive play time! An under stimulated dog can get extremely antsy, but enough activity will help to reduce the urge to break free when out in public. You'll have a good time, and your pup will too.

Pet of the Week — Kimmy

Kimmy's Story...

"Hi, there, everybody! My name is KIMMY, and I'm a beautiful Miniature Schnauzer mix who wants to brighten your day. I'm a pretty and peppy pooch with a zest for life. I'm about two years old, and I enjoy going for walks and playing with my friends. I'm a happy gal who would do well in a family where the kids are older and considerate of me, and I play well with other dogs. I just went to the groomer, so I look and feel great! The shelter staff is fairly certain that I've already been house trained (I might need a quick refresher course when I get home). I'd sure love to find my forever home as soon as possible. It would be great if I could have a soft bed to sleep in, and I'd love to be your snuggle-bug. I'll want to be a cherished member of the family and your loyal buddy. Won't you come visit me? They've got a great play yard here at the El Cajon Animal Shelter where we can get better acquainted. I'd love to see you soon! Love, Kimmy" Kennel #31
